CHAD: Insurgents Closing In

Rebel leader Habre's troops are moving in force toward Massaguet, where they will assemble for a final drive on N'Djamena. 25X1

Insurgent commanders now expect only token resistance from government forces. They intend to seize the capital after the OAU deadline for President Goukouni to enter into negotiations expires on 10 June. A senior OAU official has told the US Ambassador in N'Djamena that peacekeeping troops will not support government forces.

Fighting reportedly broke out in Moundou on Thursday between supporters of southern strongman Colonel Kamougue, who favors striking a deal with Habre, and forces of a rival southern military leader who opposes such an accommodation. Many southerners consider Habre to be brutal and ruthless. Kamougue last month alleged that Libya was working behind the scenes to encourage disgruntled southern politicians to depose him. 25X1 25X1

Comment: Goukouni still shows no inclination to talk. If he flees to Cameroon or seeks asylum in Libya, French officials speculate that he may eventually return to northern Chad to mount insurgent operations against Habre, perhaps with Libyan help. 25X1

Kamougue's troubles do not bode well for north-south cooperation after Goukouni is toppled. Reports that Libya is fanning unrest in the south probably are true. They presumably reflect an attempt by Tripoli to keep Chad in turmoil and thus vulnerable to new Libyan meddling. 25X1

(9) BELGIUM: Probable Delay on INF Basing

Flemish Social-Christian leaders, including Prime Minister Martens and Foreign Minister Tindemans, reportedly have decided not to announce the site chosen for the 48 ground-launched cruise missiles until after the municipal elections in October. Foreign Ministry officials admit that this could delay prompt contracting for site design work. More importantly, they fear it could lead politicians to take anti-INF public positions during the election campaign that would hamper government efforts to obtain sufficient public and parliamentary support for INF deployment.

25X1

Comment: The Flemish Social-Christians are the dominant force in the coalition, and this decision virtually ensures that Belgium will not make its deployment decision soon. INF is likely to become a campaign issue in the elections this fall. The Belgian press has already begun to carry stories revealing that the government is planning to base the missiles at Florennes in Wallonia.
